CITY CHASE: 'Amazing Race'- style competition goes downtown

Ever watched contestants on "Survivor" or "The Amazing Race" struggle with a challenge and think to yourself "I could totally do that"? Well, now is your chance to prove your prowess to greater San Diego by participating in City Chase.

The event is an "urban adventure" that asks two-member teams to locate "ChasePoints" scattered through the city by having them decipher clues and work through mental and physical challenges. Though team check-in begins tomorrow at 8 a.m., it's not too late to sign up. As long as both participants are over 18, at least one of your team members is a citizen of the U.S. and you're willing to fork over the $190 registration fee, you're good to go.

The event begins at the Embarcadero and will end at Rock Bottom Brewery. Should your team win, you'll be rewarded with the grand prize of a trip to compete in the USA Championship in October. However, most people don't seem to compete for the prize:

"Can't wait til this year's City Chase Chicago!" said one participant on City Chase's official Web site. "Last year was a blast. I loved working out the clues and discovering what activity we would have to complete to earn our points. We fenced, ate dog food, repelled down a five-story building, all while meeting cool, fun people throughout the day."
